Kodak, on 16 July

1. While talking to Ed Green on another matter, he raised again the question of multiple assistance and direction which he has received in connection with Eastman Kodak's efforts on the [redacted] According to Ed, he has received guidance and instructions from [redacted] not all of which instructions are completely compatible each with the other.

2. He expressed his growing concern over this from a security point of view, as well as that of management, and said that he is completely unclear who is going to arbitrate matters when he receives simultaneously opposite instructions from any of the people noted above. It was his suggestion that in the absence of technical and action direction from which he says he is now suffering, that he would propose identifying [redacted] as the source of guidance of such matters and as the resolving authority based upon considerations of over-all NRO security and contracting responsibilities residing with us. I would appreciate your reaction to his comments, together with suggested courses of action which might minimize the apparent confusion.
